TIPS FOR THE HIGH ABILITY STUDENT

- When you have a concern, share it with a trusted friend, relative, or other adult. Thinking out loud helps define the issue; others may offer support and ideas.
- Focus on problem solving. Find out all you can, consider different views, consider whether the issue needs to be reframed, develop a strategy.
- Work hard. Sometimes more effort is spent on worrying about assignments, grades, or other concerns than is spent on actual work related to the concerns.
- Develop social skills. Be genuinely interested in others and what they are doing; be kind to everyone; invite someone else to share an activity both will enjoy
- Keep a journal or write songs or poetry. Regular writing about your thoughts and feelings helps you to clarify and allows you to see the progress you are making in growth and maturity.

TIPS FOR THE HIGH ABILITY STUDENT

- Engage in regular physical activity. Burning of energy in sports or physical exercise releases tension and promotes good health and positive self concept.
- Do something for others. Engage in some sort of community service or regular assistance to someone less fortunate; it puts your own problems in perspective and boosts your self esteem.
- Engage in relaxing activities for enjoyment. Read, sing, play an instrument, watch movies, cook, build things, follow a team, listen to music, go to a play, etc.
- Avoid: Worry without developing a positive plan for a solution. Wishful thinking without developing goals and plans. Neglect of work or problems. Withdrawing from others. Excessive self blame and self criticism. Expecting yourself and/or others to be perfect.
